

Pet Pals and Fur-Ever Friends

Your pets are treasured members of the family that deserve the personalised attention and care that you offer them, even while you're away.

That's why engaging a live-in house and pet sitter presents a great opportunity for your pet to stay in their own home environment, stress free and with a dedicated carer - it just makes sense.

So in celebration of National Pet Adoption Day, we would like to take a moment to raise a paw to all those precious animals out there looking for loving homes, and to all our animal loving home and pet owner members, for the wonderful role you play as passionate pet-parents.

99% of Mindahome's positions involve the care of a pet, so it may not surprise you to learn that close to 60% of our house and pet sitting members admit that saying goodbye to the pets they care for is the hardest part about leaving a house and pet sit. We're all for animals and all animal lovers.

If you're planning some travel and need an animal loving live-in house and pet sitter, browse the many house and pet sitter profiles online or post a position for free.

And remember to join our community of animal lovers on Facebook and Twitter.

Enjoy your travels!

Trust plays a very important role in the house and pet sitting relationship between sitter and owner. So you need to make sure that you provide as much information as possible prior to the sit, to ensure that both parties understand what is expected. More...

Testing Your Pet's Eyesight

Night vision is often the first to go if your pet is experiencing vision loss. To check your pet's eyesight, move furniture into different positions during dark or night time situations and see how well your fur-friend navigates through the obstacle course you have created. If they bump into the furniture, best to organise a trip to the vet for a proper checkup.
